Description
Students will continue their study of this dynamic industry. Content includes clothing construction, sizing patterns, and developing the fashion figure (croqui) drawing, as well as analysis of apparel wholesale and retail markets, and of fashion trends. Students will create a portfolio through sketching techniques, clothing construction samples, product development, research, logo development, and final clothing line. Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to design fashions, construct garments, define appropriate fashion terminology, explain the structure of the fashion industry, and understand the production and marketing of the fashion product. They will also learn the elements involved in directing and producing a fashion show, and will display their garments in a fashion show at the end of the course.

Prerequisites
Students must pass the Fashion Design and Fashion Design Production courses or have similar experience.
